

The Great Cover-up - Masking COVID-19 Risks

In light of COVID-19, supply and demand for face masks were limited. Cooperative Extension and Outreach's Consumer and Family Science Department have created a Mask Making tutorial video for anyone at home to create for themselves and their family. The short videos allow individuals to create a variety of masks based on personal preference for style and availability of supplies at home or on the island. While the mask is the physical outcome of these activities, providing education on basic consumer skills, such as needle and thread use, material composition, measurement, and product construction, are inherent to the education process of basic consumer living skills. Videos, as well as printed materials, are coordinated to ensure information is available in a variety of methods for all learners. These materials are available on the website for access at any time and for learners at their own pace.
